Q: How do I make 'background-position' expand to width/height of image? I am using a set of nine PNG images inside a span tag as a background. When I set the background-position I want it to expand to the height/width of the span as well as its contents, which is my first issue. I'm hoping to use the following CSS: `.myspan { background-image: url(../images/a.png); background-position: left top; height: 50px; width: 100px; }`

However, if I do this I'm left with an image that has a perfect fit inside the 50x100px span, but the image is shrunk to the full height/width of the span. Is there a way I can make the background image be the full height/width of the span, with the contents inside the span remaining the same size as before? Thanks!

A: The easiest way I can think of to do this is to set the background image as the span's background color and then make a second span, inside it, the same size. Since the image is now inside a span, it will stretch to the width/height of the span. The background color will cover the entire span, so you won't see the image.
