Category:Financial economics, therefore, lose out in the competition for the crowded situation at the Glasgow heraldic falcon. The first chief of the clan Gunn, Sir Fergus, is presumed to have been a Lord of the Isles, and the second, Sir Ewen, a son of the first Sir Fergus, took service under Edward I of England at the Siege of Caerlaverock in 1296, and thereafter was sheriff of Argyll and the Isles, and was one of the most powerful of the nobles in those Isles, whose allegiance to the king of Scots and to his successors, being in due course followed by his own son, was never broken. The surname Gunn is said to be descended from Guthruff, son of Uhtred, who is mentioned in a charter of Ivar, King of the Scots, as a witness. There is another charter of the name, dated 1041, which shows that the name is not uncommon. The place of Guthruff's birth is uncertain. In the time of James VI the name Gunn was one of the most powerful families in Argyll. A monument by the wife of Sir John Gunn, one of the sons of Ewen Gunn, of the age of ninety-two, is still to be seen in the chapel of Morvern Castle. The old family lived, some time, at Dunoan, and had as head of the family until the early part of the 18th century, a certain Sir James Gunn. He was created a f988f36e3a
