One of the most discussed features in the Photoshop family, the ability to use the existing image as mask for the new image is one of the most powerful features that the designers used. In fact, Photoshop is one of the first tools that was used to create the masking features of Adobe Illustrator. With those of Photoshop, the designer could retain the old image without letting it be affected by new colors, so that the customer could easily view the old image. It gave such a powerful tool that it was then being offered in Illustrator. When the Adobe and Hexagon were launched in 2010, Photoshop was a part of it. Initially the usage of Photoshop in the photoshop section was initially silent but during the next three years, it shot to a $2.5 billion. This is the reason, there are many bloggers who are constantly fuelling up the Photoshop features with the latest changes in Adobe. The main improvements that the final version of Photoshop X showed were the hinting, Blend if, and the addition of a new design file format. Adobe's famous features of eliminating the color mode bar that pushes Photoshop into far over the other editors in its class. Instead, Adobe saved the feature of the color mode bar . A simple click eliminates the colour panel of the image. This is perhaps one of the most useful features that the designers introduced. Shade has been around since the dawn of Photoshop, but the Color panel of the image was one of the essential areas of Photoshop. Over the years, as the use of services like Xsel.net increased, the color management bar was seen as a complexity added to the tool. However, now with the new shift from pixel based to colour based files, not only have the tools for image editing improved, but also the organisations that make these tools have now shortened the approach and made Photoshop document based.
